Alignment to All That Is

Good day Entities! I am Nademus come to assist you in remembering your divinity and remembering your alignment to All That Is in this beautiful journey of love that you are all on. But what is remembering and what have you forgotten? I would like to address the forgetfulness first, as the process of remembering is subsequent to the process of forgetfulness, yet, they are one and the same.

Forgetfulness is a function of lowered vibrational frequency as it relates to your interaction in time and space, space being the allowance parameter in which thought activates and manifests and time being the vehicle of that occurrence. Without time or space, your experience is one of total awareness and self-realization in one grand moment of being in the Powerful Now Moment. Experience within this moment encases dimensional frequencies and timelines of focus, unlimited in nature and expanded by the process of growth.

When you first achieved the lowering of your vibratory frequency to the level of third dimension, your most basic understanding and awareness became vibrationally absent from your retrieval mechanism, your brain. Your brain evolved as the storehouse of knowledge and your mental body gradually became your predominant means of expression. This served the function of your first memory lapse as physical beings. But your awareness was not focused upon vibrational frequency but rather sensory input and refining your ability to articulate the body in physicality. Your focus was altered from the knowingness of your divine nature to your experience as a physical representative of thought.

So your experience in these physical bodies is an experience of lowered thought to the point of density for the purpose of experience. Now this experience held no requirements because you live in a free will universe, but your original intent was to enter into this physicality for the purpose of experiencing in joy. You had a functioning ego to assist you in that endeavor. Ego was designed to offer to you a reactive process to thought and sensory information from your surroundings and the environment. You flourished in the beginning under these conditions because you maintained the memory of your divine nature. However, by the use of free will and your adventurous nature, you created your way into forgetfulness of your divinity and into the limitations of the plane of physicality.

Once so profoundly limited in your scope of thought, you began to feel the absence of the connection to spirit that led you to physicality in the first place. Through that absence of connection, you began to seek guidance and found that guidance in ego, that part of yourself that was absolutely articulate in the conditions of third dimension. So began reliance upon a faction of yourself ill-equipped to address spirit, as it was specifically designed to monitor and assist only in the physical. But ego took on the challenge and you blithely followed its advice far beyond its capacity to lead. Hence your disconnection to spirit was enhanced each time you used your brain's apparatus.

Using your brain to articulate thought is likened unto using a middleman in financial transactions. Your brain functions like a computer and yes, stores thought, but far greater storage occurs in the body itself and in the heart region. Your DNA holds information of all your creative experience, and the creative experience of a myriad of life forms as they contributed to your creation. These memories have been locked and encoded with keys to opening your beingness to your true identity and to your true self. Experience is that key and it affords the means to open yourself to possibilities. In the possibilities of spirit, light triggers the awareness that ego cannot lead you home or to remembering self. Light honors your divine origins and through this interaction of experience and its action on the cells of your body, your soul and the computer brain, encoded messages stimulate your quest for remembering your self with spirit.

So remembering is not the recall of forgotten or neglected thoughts, but rather the re-remembering of your beingness to complete a cycle of reunion with your spiritual self. That reunion forges your pathway home on a path of light anointed with truth and love. So forgetting literally has provided the fodder for the remembering and remembering enhances that which has been forgotten. They are one and the same. It becomes clear that though forgetfulness may appear in contradiction to remembering, it actually is a required component of that experience and experience is the means by which the encoded messages to self are stimulated.

Let the experience of remembering be easy and light, full of compassion and love. Let your remembering bring you to the wholeness of your original self and allow it the freedom to articulate truth and your experience of that truth as a model for others to strive for. Remember your spirit, remember your divinity and remember your wholeness. Indeed. Adieu. With God you are and I am. So be it.
