Nademus
Deliberate Creation

Good Day Entities! And it is a fine day indeed. It matters not if the day is bright and shining, warm and fragrant or if it is blustering cold with gray, overcast skies. It is a fine day. What makes it a fine day is your willingness to acknowledge the condition of the day in any spectrum of expression and know that day holds its own properties of creation, its own expression of creation and its own influence on your own personal attitude and expression of your being within this concept of day. For the day itself is a construct of time and place. It is a construct of creation. The day holds the form of a vessel into which the contents of itself are displayed and participated with in a variety of fashions and within a multitude of contexts.

As we view our created realities, we see life seemingly unfold before our very eyes presenting itself literally as a framework upon which to build and expand our particular versions of reality. For indeed, each person's reality, though similar, is vastly different and holds a uniqueness that dots the landscape of this created world with sprinkles of individuality and the spice of variety. It is the very diversity of the billions of people inhabiting this day, in this world, in this version of reality, that is the causation of so much interest in your world, particularly at this time of evolutionary progress. You have outpaced yourselves into a frenetic movement that is overwhelming the nervous systems of the people of this plane and the world upon which you participate in this dance of life.

Now, of course, you are completely familiar with the experience of your personal nervous systems. It is through your nervous system that you are sensitized creatures capable of the act of creation in third dimension. The literal spark of creation initiates the process through the electromagnetic format of your bodies. Would it surprise you that creation in a third-dimensional world requires a third-dimensional body? Active creation indeed is stimulated from and through the capacity of your primary focused bodies in this particular focus, using primarily your third, fourth and fifth dimensional bodies. Now this is not a statement that limits creation to the physical body, but rather a definition of the parameter of your function in these bodies. Your bodies are required to garner and record the full experience of your creation via the five senses and their interactive capacity, yet you in your unlimited capacity as creator gods, are doing so under the auspices of the spiritual, or sixth-dimensional body which provides the creative glue that holds the whole process together in this expression.

Can you create from other realms? Yes but from a different perspective. Can you function from another realm within this one? Yes and no. It requires, remember, the body to create within this plane but a being from another realm may manipulate and direct the experience of the third-dimensional being. Now this may be done in a loving, benevolent manner, such as this very interaction between myself and my channel. We, through mutual respect and agreement, join together to participate in this fashion to introduce knowledge and wisdom originating outside of this day-to-day experience. I quite literally can, with her permission, utilize her body to conduct my participatory interactions with you. Now this same process can be utilized in a fashion that may not be so benevolent and can be symbolized as what may be termed a fearful experience that one might seek to avoid.

So what spurs the difference between a truly loving, purposeful and enlightened journey with the outer realms and an experience that feels manipulated and fearful? The difference is intention, personal purpose and the ideation of light. What assures that one is sustained by these attributes, directive behavior and mindset? It is clarity sparked by the truth that lies within. This truth can be accessed at all times as it is the premise of these bodies you inhabit. It is always, always there and available to you. You have a constant and fluent flow of this clarity that surrounds your bodies in a field of energy that has buoyancy and bounce, a nebulous forever-moving sum of particles of God that strengthen and enliven your form. Your aura. It is the energy that surrounds and supports your experience in these bodies. It is spirit and it is a constant state of being in a fluctuating atmosphere of thoughts and feelings, attitudes and beliefs that make up the uniqueness of you.

Now sometimes, this inherent clarity becomes clouded and muddied by the focus on fear to the degree that fear takes on the pretense of cloaking your inherent truth. The moments when this happens are the moments when you feel out of control and “on the edge” of yourself, so to speak. It is those times that you are not running your world or in charge of yourself from this inherently purposeful place. It is in these times that your ego body is holding the reigns and leading you in a direction that is self-serving to its agenda.

You say, but Nademus, I am so afraid to be afraid! What do I do? To that I say, Entity, calm yourself and remember your divinity. Calm yourself and remember your purpose. Calm yourself and feel the buoyancy of your spirit take charge. There is nothing that your ego or some malevolent force can do to you. You cannot be victimized, nor can you be forced to participate in something you have not given your permission, vibrationally, unto.

You see, that is the hold that fear has on you. It has such a valid appearing pretense of extreme power that you surrender to your tendency to succumb to its glamour. Fear is pervasive, consuming, and durable to the extent that your focus is directed its way. The longer and more direct your focus, the more fear these third-dimensional bodies experience. But remember, experience is your purpose in third-dimension. It is quite literally your job, so to speak, to incorporate experience and utilize the action of it to glean wisdom and allow it to blend into the fullness of being. So the experience of fear is not the same as being fear. Again, you may experience fear but not be fear. And that is the grace built into the entire process of creation.

You, as the creator and the experiencer of that creation, hold all the power keys. You hold the script and you sit in the director's chair. You hold the camera and act in the scenes. And you sit in the viewing audience as well. You are everything to and for yourself. In other words, you are in charge. What do you do about fear? Recognize what it is, how you participate, what you believe about it, determine what degree of its influence you allow in your life, decide your preference of the two basic emotions of love and fear, and decide upon and act out the actions of deliberate creating.

You hold the cards in this game. Remembering that spurs an incredible boost of energy to propel you into a fine day. Remember that this fine day is always a fine day because this day is a platform for God to experience self. How you choose to view the experience can always register as a fine and powerful day no matter the particulars of that day. The day acts as the influence of the platform upon which you unfold your canvas and create.

What are you choosing to paint? What kinds of scenes do you wish to participate within? You choose. You decide. You can because you are God. You can because you are powerful. You can because you say so. Take heart Entities. The day is coming when your knowledge will play forth upon the fabric of creation and you will fully understand. The mystery of life, as you know it, will be solved. And it will be so because you remembered. You are in the process of remembering now, and now, and now. And Now! Behold. You are the light of God.

I am Nademus. I bid you adieu. With God you are and I am. So be it. Indeed.
