Discerning Truth Nademus

Good day entities. I am Nademus. Let us begin this discussion with an acknowledgement of truth. Truth sounds out as a beacon of light, a statement of indelible integrity, as the honor of the Godlight. Truth is the articulation of all that is honest and forthright and good. Truth represents the state of being pure and whole and exemplary. Truth is the ideal to which you strive to be and express. But, does truth live in your world? Does truth, spoken from the heart of mankind, shine? And does this question not conjure confusion as to the suggestion that truth may or may not be the ultimate expression in your world? In other words, if truth is what truth is, how can it be otherwise? The nature of truth forms an apex of communication and the foundational basis of life itself. Truth is, was and always will be truth, foundation of light, foundation of love, foundation of beauty. Truth exists as a state of being. Truth exists as a function. Truth exists as a process.

So what renders truth, truth? What are the attributes of truth for the recognition of this state of sublime grace? Need there be recognition of truth to experience its honor? These are queries you seldom concern yourself with or entertain in your day-to-day living. And by the very nature of truth, need you concern yourself with definition or the highlight of its qualities? No, not until you perceive an untruth, the antithesis of truth.

Untruth! The very word rubs you wrong. It initiates feelings of anxiety, memories of experience, fear of involvement and a negative sense of being diminished and tight. Untruth represses and puts off, puts you on high alert to its situational provocation. Untruth degrades the situation, dishonors the participants and cloaks communication with the darkness of fear. Truth resonates within you as the essence of life while untruth swims in the murkiness of stagnant waters. But both exist in this world you inhabit. Both thrive in the Universe of Free Will because you have choice stimulated from the platform of polarity.

Universal choice - free will - presents the opportunity to choose between polarities inherent in this plane and in this Universe. Free will potentializes truth and untruth by its very nature. Free will optimizes contrast, present in your world as a tool to distinguish choice. Free will implies polarity and polarity supports choice. So, do you choose truth or do you choose untruth? You say, but Nademus, of course I choose truth for I am a physical expression of the Godlight and the nature of the Godlight is truth and integrity and clarity and the essence of the sublime. To that I say, whole-heartedly, I agree that the Divine You, that whole essence of the spark of divinity, is an expression of truth and that you live that truth to the best of your ability, which, in third-dimensional understanding, can be hindered by your compliance to belief systems.

In these embodiments you hold resonance with your associations to what is. In other words, your beliefs about reality represent to you the truth about reality and that truth renders itself as the basis for your decision-making. However, by the nature of beliefs, they are influential of choice. Taking this understanding forward then, it could be assumed that directing and manipulating mass belief systems to set the stage for choice could garner power. If you, the chooser, the decision maker, rely upon your beliefs to determine your reality, the beliefs themselves are the holders of power and those who sway the beliefs and form the beliefs that become accepted by the mass of humanity, are now in position to literally usurp your power, with your total agreement and the "belief" that you are exercising your individual freedom of choice. Quite a manipulative little scenario! And you, the chooser, do not even realize it is occurring because you are not fully utilizing your powers of discernment.

Discernment is that quality of knowing that distinguishes veracity and resonance. It intuitively clarifies and forms, utilizing the very essence of your Godself as the basis, the springboard of creation. Discernment is a tool you inherently understand if you simply recognize that you own it and begin to use it. It does not have to be learned, but it must be exercised and it must be allowed to function. Those who would manipulate your mass beliefs would have you forget this inherent tool, this divine dowsing stick that magnetizes to truth. They would have you not only forget this tool of discernment; they would have you disregard it from your experience. How would this occur? By the turning over of your power to mass belief systems by your free will choice, made through the contrast made predominant in your vision by the very ones who wish to control you.

Consider that through mass belief, there is a momentum of experience. Without the use of your discernment, the nature of that momentum can be interpreted as truth, because so many others are also involved in the belief. Investigating your belief structures will illuminate for you this phenomenon. However, in this investigation, probe deeply, not just with beliefs about religion, government and the more obvious mass belief structures present in your experience. Probe deeply into the more subtle beliefs that you hold on the subsurface levels of thought, such as history as you know it, what relationships "should" look like to you, how you nourish yourselves with the foods and beverages you ingest, literally every aspect of your reality.

Reality, as you know it, has manifested as a result of beliefs. And there is much of your reality that you are wishing to, and invoking of, change. When you make choices for change you are doing so because the reality you are currently experiencing reverberates within you the calling for change from one experience to another. The belief is held that change will bring about a new reality, a new experience and new life. Free will is absolutely instrumental in this process. But from what are you making your choices? You are making choices from your beliefs about reality. And if you do not examine your beliefs about reality and use your tools of discernment in that examination, then you are very likely to make your choices via the path of manipulated mass belief to manipulated mass belief. You would be following this inclination not out of some incapacity within you, but from the slumbering state of being you were lulled into by those manipulating the mass beliefs to their benefit. Know that beliefs are just beliefs. They can change, altering your experience. But knowing, that quality of being that can be disrupted by belief systems, but never stripped from you, remains intact, awaiting the opportunity to fully blossom once again and enliven your experience.

The criteria of your tools of discernment is this inherent knowing, the exquisite Truth of your being of the Godlight. When you use your discernment, you are tapping into inner strength, innate truth, the treasure of your divinity, and these qualities hold a vibrational frequency of All That Is, the Source of your very being. You are divine light and you have slumbered that knowing. But in your slumber, the dream of your freedom of choice, your free will, began to rouse your consciousness and the truth of your potential is spurring you to question reality. This questioning opens vistas of truth and sheds light upon the puppeteers who enslave your minds through mass belief systems designed to usurp your power. Take it back by loving yourself fully. Take it back by loving the puppeteers from their fear into the light. Remember that the Light of God shines so brightly as to illuminate all of the darkness. It is just that you must recognize, through your discernment, where to find it. You are profoundly loved. I bid you adieu. So be it. Indeed.
