Knowing Peace Nademus

Good Day Entities! I am Nademus, come forth to share with you thoughts, share with you triggers for your own thoughts and opportunities for creation. As you are so spectacularly aware, reality is a state of expression wherein you, the Creators, are the instruments of action precipitated by choice. In other words, you know yourselves as the basis of your created world. Or do you? You are, you know! You are the basis for all creation and that basis creates, supports, views and experiences the wholeness of the thought. Thought itself is a template, an idea, a concept crying out for fulfillment. Thoughts, though the premise of creative expression holds within them only potential, this potential must be united with the passionate spark of interest and focus and attention to become experience in third dimension. So thoughts generate themselves only by the support and adulation of God's attention, your attention.

So what are you giving your attention to these days? Many of you would say that, of course, the war with Iraq and the endangerment of the people of Iraq and the people of the United States. This is what is important. This is what must be dealt with, for the decisions of the United States and its leaders have created a situation that must be dealt with, must be addressed, must be solved and resolved. Isn't that obvious??

To that I say no, not so obvious. It is obvious if you empower the idea of war. It is obvious if you exemplify the illusion of the lack of personal power within the seemingly greater occurrence of national decisions. It is obvious if thought is supported by passive agreement to the seemingly sweeping momentum of force. But it is not so obvious if you consider that creation is first an individual responsibility and only then becomes a collective experience. For there is no such thing as a collective responsibility in the sense that everyone must, as good citizens, good parents, good children, etcetera, be compliant with a prescribed script of creation. Remember, the act of creation is first an individual process, which, through agreement and alignment, can coalesce into a collective and mass agreement. It starts with you and how your perceptions of your own power relate your creativity to deliberate creation or default creation.

What appears so obvious, is that the current decision to propagate a conflict, a war, is the decision, first, by one individual, who by intention and by repetition and by the aide of influence, reaches out to other individuals for agreement and alliance. Depending on the mindset and personal intentions of others, the momentum begins to build and build and build and eventually, the original idea begins to take on a momentum of its own and a life of its own, an energy of its own. Such an energy then becomes a focal point of potential to align unto, either by deliberate choice or default choice.

So what I am suggesting is for you to evaluate your own compliance. What is the avenue of choice that you have followed, are following, and are taking a stand upon? Are you enforcing a feeding of a concept that has simply taken on its own momentum, such as war, and adding your default energy to it because of the bigness of the idea? Does the idea of war seem out of your hands to control or change? Or, are you in a deliberate place of choice to honor and support your own truths?

Now, you may think that I am suggesting that war is an untruth and to align to that is incorrect. I am not. You may also think that I am suggesting that peace is a truth and the definite path to follow. I am not. What I am suggesting here is that neither war nor peace is, in and of itself, an idea or concept of reliable substance. These words are templates for the substance of ideas, the substance of potential for creation. You make of them what you will. They are not finite terms, but ever-changing and ever-moving states of expression.

To view the terms of war and peace as things, concrete and rendered of a complete understanding within themselves, is to say that they have become caught up in the momentum of an idea and, in your terms, have been made real, or have been made matter. And to that matter do you address your creative resolve. War or peace? You take sides because you have opinions about these objects of matter. You align to ideals because you believe these terms, war and peace, to be of consequence.

Now, at this moment, you may be sitting back on your heels and saying, "What????"

Good. I am pleased that you have stopped to question, even if the question may hold judgment about what I am saying. I am pleased because this stopping, for whatever reason, allows for you to step off the speeding train to conclusion, intellectual conclusion, about ideas that have become matter by the original alignment of one person and consequent agreement by other persons, which has built into a condition to be dealt with. By stopping and stepping back from this evolution of thought, you can evaluate from a more broad perspective, from observation rather than indulgent participation. You can slow down and view with greater clarity your choices and their eventual outcome.

Now that you have stepped back and slowed this personal momentum, let us look at your personal power. Now your personal power is an innate and inherent state of being of the God you are. You are Creative Source in the expression of human form, spirit having a physical experience. And that experience can be anything you want it to be. You are the Creator, after all. Being the Creator, you can choose to create and understand you are creating, or you can choose to create and forget you had anything to do with it. When you forget you had anything to do with it is when you find yourself in alignment to ideas for the sake of the involvement rather than the knowing of purpose. Can you see that war and peace are both just ideas, just concepts that call for support? Can you see that they are simply the extremes on the polarity pole? Can you see that if you align to war then fear and anxieties drive you to seek peace and if you align to peace, you are under constant vigilance to avoid war? That is the nature of the polarity pole and the duality that you experience in this dimension.

It is to God that I am bringing forth this information. It is to be known God that offers you solace. For when you align to ideas and concepts of a world of duality, you consequently align to that duality and, unknowingly and inadvertently, align to fear and the illusion of separation.

So how do you know yourself as God while at the same time and in the same moments, you experience yourself within a world of illusion?

Ah!! This is the question that I have designed to trigger you toward. The answer to that is far shorter than the means to get you there. The answer is to allow yourself the grace of your own expression. It is to use your intellect, your emotions and your physical manifestations to elaborate upon the theme of creation and to open your eyes unto the light that is shining from them. That light is the light of divinity and the kind of peace that lives within as a glorious exemplification of All That Is expressing in individuated form to its own glory and expansion.

Simply, you let yourself step back, you stop the madness, and you listen for the knowledge that is bubbling up which clears the debris of separation and the confusion of clouded sight. You breathe in the essence of love and breathe out the experience of it. You see this plane of demonstration for what it is, an incredible stage in which you make ideas matter, and you view the ideas from the place of observation rather than the place of active participation. You step outside of the self you have defaulted to knowing and you hold reverence to the Self you are. In doing so, you open up vistas of truth and in those truths you see that fear is the deeply imbedded illusion that veils your soul from the exquisite experience of itself and from the inherently joyful stance, which is its foremost intention.

Know that war and peace are of matter and that attention to matter fuels matter. You are more than the matter that you are experiencing and because you are more than the matter you are experiencing, you hold undeniable power to achieve the creation of matter to reflect the inherent peacefulness that is you. This peacefulness is far and beyond the idea of peace from the polarity pole, which is the opposite of war. The grace of the peace you are in your God state shines forth with the love that life is and the essence of God that you are.

I invite you to consider these words. I invite you to remember your power. I invite you to recall the absolute truth of your being, that you are God, One with All That Is, and pure in essence. I ask that you spend a few moments in your time to experience this and through that very experience, that very focus and alignment to your inner truth, will you find the kind of peace that is beyond polarity and resides in the realm of God.

Focus love and you offer love. Focus clarity and you offer clarity. Focus truth and you offer truth. Let these attributes of being touch this world of matter to shatter the bridge of fear that keeps you under the guise of illusion. Shatter it with the warmth and gentleness of love. Bring an end to the war and peace within the illusionary you and bring forth the grandeur of love and compassion to engage within this world of matter and bring it Light.

You are profoundly loved. Adieu. With God you are and I am. So be it. Indeed!
