Good day entities. And a fine day it is. Please take this opportunity to look around and absorb the impact of the experience of being in a body. How do you feel? What level of awareness do you hold about what you are seeing? It is likely that you might view the world around you as a simple representation of life. Perhaps you are looking at your children and their sweet cherub faces, or maybe at the golden orb in your azure sky and know it to be Ra, your glorious sun. Nature's splendor may be your focus, or the clutter of this morning's meal preparation. Whatever you view, no matter the significance, I invite you to take it in and consider its meaning.

Now this exercise that I have suggested to you is an extremely simple one. You do this every moment of your day. You view reality and you interact with it. Certainly, you may not ask yourself the questions of meaning and significance, but what you see and experience is nonetheless the reality you know and from that perspective is an ordinary event, an ordinary occurrence, an ordinary moment.

What I would like to suggest is that not one moment of your experience in these physical bodies is an ordinary experience. Not one breath is usual and not one idea is insignificant. What I would like to share here is the absolute divinity in every perceived moment in time in which you participate.

I respond to your herald for the understanding of your own divinity and the exclamation of your knowing that each and every one of you are, on some level, feeling the call Home, experiencing the great awakening. You are feeling the pressure from within to open your inner spiritual eyes to Truth and to release the illusion that pervades your consciousness. Each of you is seeking, some in active participation of the search and others by answering the call to understand more of yourself through participation with religions and associations. You are called to return to community and are slowly etching a path from the safe harbor of the cocoons you have lived within for so long.

Some of you may challenge that, saying, "but Nademus, I have escaped that safe harbor long ago and now I am immersed within the awakening masses preparing my way Home. Surely you don't mean me?" And I would say to you that indeed, I do mean you. For you see, even as it is you are moving at your own pace, swift or lingering, on your path home, you still do so behind the veil. You are shielded from your clear and open awareness by your recollection of time.

Allow me to share with you a way in which to understand this concept more fully, more easily if you will, and to consequently be enabled to utilize this knowing to speed your journey. All journeys in your awareness have a starting place and a destination. Your destination is Home with the Father, your starting point is your now as you know that to be and the journey itself is your process of remembering.

I invite you to travel with me through a concept that explains so much and offers you a deep awareness of experience, memory and empowerment. Let us begin with a brief reminder of your creative process.

I have shared this with you many times, but as you awaken, gentle reminders assist by offering repeated clarity to your sleepy countenance and assist you to rub the sleep out of your eyes and view clearly. You are the creator of your reality, clear and simple. All things, feelings, experiences and circumstances within your life expression are the creation of manifest reality through the auspices of thought. You function within a system of reality that utilizes a multidimensional perspective in this creativity. You are most predominantly focused in a four-body system of the physical, 3rd dimension, emotional, 4th dimension, mental, 5th dimension and the spiritual, 6th dimension. This four-body system interacts with itself in creating, experiencing and exemplifying the fruits of your divine prowess as co-creative gods.

The Universal Law of Love is the basic premise of life, providing for life and creative propulsion. The Law that Thought Creates supports the first step of creativity. It allows for Mind, progenitor of thought, to exemplify Itself through the vision of template, form, the creative outline, so to speak, of desire and the forever movement forward to explore Self. Thought always precedes emotion, which is energy in motion, neutral until you give it meaning. This thought and emotion join together, combining their frequencies into the vibratory expression of the creative moment. This creative moment is the command of god in vibratory form, calling upon the very universe itself to reply in reverence and absolute honoring of your request. The Universe utilizes the Law of Attraction that states "that which is liken unto itself is drawn" to call forth all the forces of God the Father to render the command of god-man and god-woman made manifest. The Law of Manifestation brings into the form of matter all that you, the creative god issuing the command, bind to self through your focus and attention.

All that you see before you then is the manifestation of the thought you choose and put your focus to, thusly holding it in your consciousness with sufficient intention to call forth all the forces of the universe to comply with the eternal movement forward of God, All That Is, Source, Mother/Father Principle, the I AM.

So here we are at the point we can play a little with the concept of time, the concept of creativity and you.

With the previously explained awareness of how you create your world, consider that while you are focused within these bodies and participating within this physical plane of demonstration, that these Universal Laws of creation are always applicable and functioning in your realm of expression. In other words, you as co-creative gods are always co-creative gods, creating the visual representation of thought and experiencing it as your reality. You are never excluded from, or outside of, that truth. So, in other words, the very popular assumption of victimization cannot possibly be a truth for you, the divine extension of Creator.

So, you create every moment "in time", every moment of the perceived lineage of lifetime after lifetime. You think and you feel and you experience the results of what you think and feel. The wheel rolls on. And on. And on. But as the awakening is occurring to rouse you from this perpetual perception, what you know about what you are seeing as reality is taking on a new light. You know something is different but you simply have not been able to pinpoint just what.

Perhaps you are now participating in the spiritual renaissance of the idea of "me in the middle". The "me in the middle" concept is one that I offer as a means that may allow you to more fully understand creation and consequently arrive at the one thought that stops the wheel and changes the venue, changes the view, changes the experience.

When you are viewing what you know to be your reality, what in essence you are doing is viewing your past creation. In other words, through the very act of creation, you are bringing the past forward into the perceived now. Imagine the game of leapfrog you enjoyed as children and you can easily conceive of this. Imagine your past, known to you as creative thoughts remembered. As it is you are in the continual act of creation, you are in the continual process of thinking the thought, feeling the feeling and manifesting the vibrational results. Manifestation is your means to view your state of consciousness at the point the creation was initiated. So, in essence, thoughts generated in the past of your linear perspective of past, present and future are literally brought forward, leapfrog fashion, over the pure essence of "me in the middle", you the creator, and brought forward into your view.

What this means is that what you are viewing and experiencing as reality is essentially your past thoughts brought forward. In other words, from the perspective of the physical plane of demonstration, what you see as reality is not really what is, but rather what was. You are viewing your past. Please take a moment to feel this.

Now, imagine the significance of this realization. If you can assimilate this idea and recognize that what is occurring before you is only the visual representation of a past thought brought forward then you can easily understand and grasp the concept not only of time, but also the reality of your true being, the divine god you are.

Remember, what you put your focus and intention to becomes your expression of reality in this physical dimension. The factor of time enters in as an organizational element in the linear model but if, in the recognition that what you have for eons assumed to be the present is truly a view of the past, then the future is essentially a replica of the past unless and until, you, the "me in the middle", awaken to yourself as the individuated essence of god who is the forever stability of the creative process.

You are the stable point of reference that your childhood friends held as the "jump over". They began at the point behind you, using you for stabilization, and leapt over you to the destination in front of your body. Then, you did the same with them. A joyful journey to be sure. Now, as you are an awakening member of the godhead, you are doing the same thing with reality. The journey still holds the points of focus of beginning point, journey and the destination, however, as you journey in perception, recall that the God in you holds the steady knowing of self.

Do you see the illusion, or the veil that forms before your eyes as you, in your forgetfulness, assume that what you see is the way things are? And, do you see that the assumptions of the difficulty in changing the way things are, are only memories of a repeated past? Do you now see that from your creative perspective and the Now Moment, the movement of God, the moment of Love, is truly the only moment there is, not in the perceived linear perspective of time, but in the Truth of the one whole God, the simultaneous moment of creation? All is Now. All is One.

Imagine the sense of freedom as you realize your power to create, not from memory or the false assumptions of "what is" but rather from that stable unified place of center and balance from which the only true Reality ensues. In doing so, you are viewing not the illusion of reality but the source of reality and when you do, you become crystal clear that what is true is at the source and is never a representation.

Good! Though somewhat challenging to conceptualize, you are doing so with mixed feelings. Some of you are experiencing sadness at the idea of creating an illusory reality and the endless repetition of it. Others of you are excited at the implications of potential. Entities, dear and beloved brethren, I ask that you relax into the moment of thought that lives between the creative pulses and feel your divinity. Feel the quiet points of the eternal forever from which you know yourself whole and the seed of god. From this place, the pure essence of Love, the very basis of all life resides. When you touch into that treasured space and know yourself to be this Holy Moment, you will understand that life as you view it and life as you live it is the journey to be explored and played with, loved and experienced. You cannot do it wrong and clearly you also cannot do it right. Right and wrong are concepts of ego, not of God.

This physical experience is amass with choices and decisions that are the requisite for created reality, a reality quite different from the True Reality of God. Yet, this created reality is the journey that God engaged with the first contemplation of Self, the very desire to know more of Self, and the grand adventure began. You are part and parcel of God and of this adventure. Love it by living it with the knowledge of your purpose and remember that you have the capacity and the magnitude of All That Is to support your journey. You are One with All. Knowing this enables the journey, your process, to venture into the creative unknown and make the old new. You no longer need to ride this ever-perpetuating wheel of existence in the direction it is going. You, from the "me in the middle" perspective can recreate a profoundly different reality by the sheer knowledge of the process and, of course, your choice and decision to create anew.

The choice is yours, the opportunity is yours, and the reality is yours. In the words of a great master, a beloved entity living this life in the form of a canine aptly named Angel, "be open, love life and run." Run with the knowledge that you are the extension of Source, divine and creative. Let it be your joy to create from the space of love. Keep what you love and that which serves your growth and expression and release the rest – easily – by simply altering your focus and intention. You hold the power. It is, after all, your journey. Everyone will reach the destination of full remembrance. It is ordained. So, from the "me in the middle" understanding, recognize the stable, steady essence of being who you are and know the difference between the assumption of what is and the truth of who you are. God incarnate.

Enjoy the journey!
