Good day entities. And a fine day it is, indeed. I am Nademus. I begin by asking you to contemplate your knowing. I ask you to touch into the arena of self that knows so that we may dwell in that space as we peruse the concepts of questioning and knowing. These concepts hold the template for advanced knowing and it is time for you to enter that realm of being.

Now, for some of you who are reading these words, you already hold a deep awareness of the movement that your awareness has taken and for others, you are awakening to your expansiveness this very moment. Know that there are no hierarchies in knowing. Yet, there are hierarchies in questioning. What I mean by this is that there are questions and then, there are questions.

Questions are so much a part of life and your expression within life that to spend much time on the topic may feel redundant to you or at the very least, you may question its purpose. You have asked questions your entire life and those questions have been instrumental in propelling your knowledge base to the heights it has reached, individually and collectively. What I am asking you to do is to “feel” your questions. Let us look more deeply at that concept.

There are five w’s that cover every subject adequately. They are who, what, when, where and why. If you peruse a newspaper article and diagram that article, you will find answers and information to match those questions. For newspaper articles, that may be sufficient to cover the topic, but I ask you, is it sufficient for your own growth and ascension process? I suspect not, because the interesting thing you are noticing is that as you read such material in the general database of knowledge, you sense the superficial qualities that are most often reflected by the five w’s. You get information but from the top, most superfluous level. What I am asking you to consider is a much deeper questioning, what I would term definitive questioning.

Now, as your mind begins to tick through its reservoir of knowledge, you break down that statement. You, of course, know what questioning is. From an old paradigm thought perspective definitive means the last authority on, a final decision that will not be questioned. So, are we talking about the final authority on questions? It likely makes no sense at all to you. But now, let us take the term definitive and view it from new paradigm thought, an enhanced point of view, and what we see is infinitely more interesting and purposeful, infinitely more pertinent. What we see in the definition of definitive is a clear, fully formed and developed, question.

This is the form of question that reaches into those regions of self and awakens the greater expanse of knowledge harbored within you. Definitive questions are fully formed and developed, holding the expanse of knowledge that is common to the unity of all. When you question using the techniques of definitive questioning, you are not simply seeking information, even well rounded information such as the five w’s offer. What you are seeking to do is to elaborate upon your knowing, in a sense, to alert yourself to the massive information base within. Remember, information is light and it is through light that you raise your consciousness and consequently your light quotient. As you raise your light quotient, you are in the very act and presence of ascending your being to higher levels and expressions.

The difference between old and new paradigm questioning is that old paradigm questioning leads you on a search for answers led by questions that are very often stimulated by the sense of the absence of knowledge, striving to fill that perceived gap. New paradigm questioning holds a much deeper intention and indeed, more prolific response and ultimately, you touch in on your inherent God light, the inherent knowing that each of you hold in common. That you hold it in common stimulates the connection that is your common origin, the connection that states you are all bodies of light, knowledge living the library of your most glorious beings in an individuated act of Oneness and a sacred unity.

Entities, when you open to definitive questioning, you find that inherent within the question is the knowing. So, in reality, what you are doing as you definitively question is that you are in awareness of your deepening perception of self and it is through that perception that you expand on your self-authority. It is an obvious advantage to awakening that it be a natural process of evolving consciousness, of triggering the internal, inherent awareness of your Godship. When you recognize yourself in grandeur, you view the essence of truth and light. You see who you are clearly and with certainty. When you see who you are, you know, truly know, your purpose. You can then take that knowing, your clear sense of purpose, and live that purpose, an act you designed yourself to commit.

You are purposeful beings, you see. Where you can feel thrown off course in these accelerating times, is when your ego controls the more superfluous method of learning, the old paradigm of gaining knowledge - asking someone else. That method defines someone else as indeed, someone else, a subtle but constricting belief system that promotes and cements into consciousness that separation does indeed exist. You live as though seeking outside of yourself is the appropriate manner of gaining knowledge.

Indeed, your educational system promotes just such a process. And, the control exerted (which of course is a fearful expression) is to cause the certification of your knowledge base and consequently, the requirements for your degrees of accomplishment and your professional criteria, to be focused in very distinct and limited directions. It is unfortunate that your scientific community, as a whole, exercises a process of thought that requires conforming to certain directives used in approaching research which precludes the heightened senses and the extensive knowledge base that resides within each of you.

But, there is a great shift occurring wherein the awakening process is touching your scientific community with a blast of intuition which is stimulating definitive questioning. Even those who have been limited in their abilities to look outside of the box are now beginning to break down barriers of thought. The walls are crumbling and new paradigm thought is soon to take a major step forward in the world dynamic. Woe be to the controllers whose hold is slipping. Their fear is great and their tactics, because of that fear, are to tighten the reins even tighter. But you, as an awakening population of gods and goddesses, are enacting such a push of intention so that controls and limitations cannot hold much longer because truth is paramount. Truth is purposeful and as purposeful beings, the mold will first crack and then shatter and the newly awakened gods will arise. And the heavens are watching this drama take place. You are doing it. You are experiencing your light move the world into love. How powerful that is!

So, definitive questioning is your tool. By now, however, you must have come to the conclusion that in order to definitively question, you must also come from the space of knowing, which in the old paradigm thought would have negated the need or desire to seek answers. Why seek answers if you already have them? And that has been a part of your limitation. You once accepted the answers you were given as from the authorities that knew. Now, you have awakened to the degree that you understand more and more about your own personal power and your self-authority. You are taking the reins of your own experience and leading from the place of love - love that knows itself as whole - love that knows itself as complete - love that knows itself as fully formed and developed.

Yes, entities, you are indeed awakening gods. That awakening began as a trickle, but with each of you courageously stepping out of the old mold and into the new expansion of being, you are now viewing your combined light as the lighthouse in the darkness. And the unity that you comprise with your individual and collective strength and power can calm all restless seas in your midst.

Yes, your definitive questioning derives through your definitive knowing triggering more definitive questions and so on. It is a whole process, articulated through whole beings, establishing wholeness as the new paradigm through questioning and knowing. You hold the key. Look inward for this key and unlock your perceptual doors and windows and gratefully breathe in the fresh air of light and love. This is who you are.

I bid you adieu. With God you are and I am. So be it. Indeed.
