

Brenda Hill

Prism Path
E 12318 Lowery rd
La Farge, WI 54639
prism-path.com
(866) 374-0243

Love, Truth and Collapsing Structure Nademus

Good day, entities. Let us address your approach to life. And approach is just another name for choice. Only approach is a patterned choice, slightly different than default in that it holds more structure. And remember, structure is falling, not just on the major arena of world governments and belief systems, but even on the more personal level of being.

One very important thing to remember is that when each of you identify and label others' behavior, you are literally fortifying and contributing to the setup of the structural components of that behavior. In other words, when you notice that the other is performing in a default pattern of behavior, rather than allowing yourself to make verbal comment of such repetition, offer gently and lovingly, a new idea. Naming, labeling or accusation, no matter how "lovingly" offered or how apt it may appear to you, is still judgment and judgment sets up resistance, resistance sets up pattern and pattern forms structure through repetition.

Structure is what you are interested in from an ego perspective and flow or spontaneity is what draws the Oneness of you. So, what you may call your "pattern" – let us use procrastination as an example - is, of course, your choice playing out within this sequence and literally cementing your expression into the structure called procrastinator.

Now, remember I just said that structures are falling, even in the personal realm. So what would be wrong with the procrastination structure falling, you might ask? As you know, there is no wrong or right. But even though the concept of the falling structure of procrastination appears, on the surface, to be a good thing, relatively speaking, the falling of the procrastination structure simply dispels a pattern. What occurs when one pattern is dispelled is that the basic proclivity to the ideals of structure still reign supreme in your ego, and with great adaptability, the ego will conjure another structure to take its place in record speed. Of course, this only occurs unless you have pre-paved your thought process into the allowance mode of free flowing spontaneity.

This pre-paving is an easy, supportive process that includes within it the deep and resonant understanding that you are more than you appear and you are more than the structure represents. The structure itself, whatever level or expression it may take, is a figment of illusion; it is a means by which the small self achieves greatness and stability. It is the form of reality built very often on consensus of thought between the collective mind and it provides the means by which the slumbering masses may assume themselves vibrant and “enthusiastically” involved with life. Structure becomes the illusion of life and, in your forgetfulness, you exist in a perpetual state of behaviors.

Now, what would be the approach to using the collapse of structure to the benefit of the One and to pre-pave thought to accommodate that? First, you are part and parcel of the One, always and forever, so the Oneness is not in any way or at any “time” compromised of Itself. It is simply that when aspects of Oneness remember, reintegrate into the full and complete awareness of themselves as the greater whole, or the One, then these collective groups of aspects once again become cognizant of their divinity and their “thoughts” also reflect that.

You are in this transitional state of remembering. As anyone can attest, transitions are generally challenging in that your “footing” is not as stable as you move from structure to structure. But, you hold the acute awareness of the structure you are leaving and the same for the structure you are entering. Now, in the process of collapsing structure, which you have not experienced before, the anxiety exists of where this transition will take you since there is no structure to replace the one that is “lost”. This anxiety is experienced as fear, which cannot exist in the space of love. If you do not pre-pave with love to ready yourself to transit your way home, then you will likely repeat your pattern of transiting from structure to structure by developing the structure of fear for yourself to transit into. Literally, the structure of fear will become your destination.

The thought may have crossed your minds that structure, in and of itself, is fear so what is the difference? How adept you are at picking up on seeming inconsistencies. You are very powerful in that, you know. You are so powerful in that talent that those whose dream it is to control and manipulate you must program and condition your thinking minds to find your answers within the structures that they themselves create for their benefit and your virtual imprisonment. But I stray somewhat.

The point is that Love is not a structure. Love is an essence of being, the truth of your greater reality. You are Love and it is only with great effort that you yourselves stray from this state of being. It is very difficult to trigger you to express from a non-loving place. But the more you are triggered to do so, and from an undisciplined focus repeatedly react to that trigger, then structure begins to form which offers your ego self the sense of stability and security within. Then, it is very easy. So the collapse of structure itself will free you from the repetitive prison of your thoughts. Pre-paving is the process by which you return in awareness to who you really are, who you have always been deep within. Pre-paving is that action and intention of disciplined focus and the placing of your attention upon truth and love, which is the One.

Now to bring this full circle, when you label yourself with a word that is nothing more than a structured shell, your tendency to fill that shell with your focus and energy, thereby assuming its proportions and form, is a default behavior, a default structure of your conditioned thoughts.

Be the catalyst for the burgeoning structural collapse of society and personal expression by deliberately focusing your divine energy upon the basic essence of life. Focus on love. Always. Consistently. For yourself and everyone (there is no difference). Be love. Think love.

Feel love. Express love. Love, Love, Love. Love is all there is.

I am Nademus. Adieu. With God you are and I am. So be it. Indeed.

Copyright ©2004 by Brenda Hill